THE

HISTORY

OF

JA CK

AND

THE GIANTS,

PART THE FIRST.

Printed at J. Pitts Wholesale Toy Warehouse o Great St. Andrew street 7 dials

CHILDREN'S BOOK COLLECTION Gift of LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELS
STEEL COS ANGELS

inled at J. Pifts Wholesale Toy War house O Great St. Andrew street 7 dials

THE FIRST PART OF

THE

HISTORY

OF

Jack and the Giants

CHAPTER 1.

Of his Birth, Parentage, and Discourse with a Country Vicar, when but serva years old.

The reign of King Arthur, near to the Land's End of England, in the county of Cornwall, lived a worthy tarmer, who had an funnamed Jack. He was brisk, and of ready wit; so whatever he could not perform by force and strength, he completed by wit and policy: never was any person he heard of that could world him: nay, the very learned he has baffled by his cunning and sharp hiventions. For inflance, when he was no more than service, when he was no more than services him to the sleld, to look after his exen which were then seeding in a pasture. A country Vicar why chance coming a rose the filld called to Jack and asked him how many commandments there were, Jack told him nine, The Parson replied, there are ten. Nay, says Jack, Mr. Parson, you are out in that—there were ten: but you have broken one of them with your maid, Margery. The Parson replied, Thou art an arch wag, Jack.

Well, Mr. Parson quoth he, you have asked one quastion, and I have anly red it, I beseech you to let me ask you another. Who made these oxen? The Parson replied, God, my dear child. Why now you are wrong again, fays Jack, for God made them bulls; but my father and his man flowed; made them oxen these were the witty answers of Jack.

The parton feeing Himself thus fooled, by this witty boy trudged away. leaving him in a laughter.

goy and in CHAP 2nd.

Of a Gainkinhaliting the Mount of Corne will, and what spoil he made in the a Neighbourhood,

In the ledays the Mount of Cornwall was tope by a large and monthrous Gunt, of cightoea feet high and about three yards in or comperence, and of a negree and of im countenance, the terror of the mighbouring towns and villages.

His habitation was in a cave in the midft of the mount; never would he fuffer any living creature to keep near him. His feeding was on other men's cattle, which often were his prey, for whenhe wanted food he would wad or ver to the main land, where he would well furnish himlest with what he could find for the people, at his approach, would all for ake their habitations, then he would fieze their cows and oxen, of which he made nothing to carry over on his back half a dozen at once, and, as for their sheep and hogs, he would tie them round his waift like a bunch of can dear, this he practised for many years, so that a very great part of the country of Carnwalt was much importantled by him.

78

and the state of t

Of Jack's slaying this Monster, & from that time obtained the name of Juck the Giant Killer.

JACK having undertaken to destroy this venomous monster, he furnished himself with a horn, a shovel, and a pickaxe, and over the mountains he goes, in the beginning of a dark winters evening, fell to work, and before morning had digged a pit of twenty seet deep and almost as broad, covering it over with long flicks, and flraw, and then flrewing a little mould over it it apreared like plain ground. Then putting the horn to his mouth, he blew tantivy, tantivy; which noise awaked the Giant, who came rearing towards Jacit: crying out. You incorrigible villain, you hall pay dearly for difturbing me; for I will broil you for my breakfait. These words were no looner ipoken, but he tumbled headlong into the pit, and his heavy fall made the foundation of the mountain shake-O Mr. Giant quoih Jack, where are you now? Faith you are in Lob's Pound, where will plague your threatening words What do you think now of broiling me for your breakfast ? Will no other diet ferve you but poor Jack? Having thus tantalized the Giant for awhile he struck him a ter-rible blow on his crown with his pole axe fo that he tumbled down and with a groan expired. This done Jack threw dirt on him, and so buried him? Then learching the cave he found much treasure.

Now when the magistrates who employed John, heard that the job was over, they fent for him declaring that the should henceforth be called Jack the Giant Killer' and in honour tnete-of, presented him with a sword and embroidered belt, upon which these wors, were written in letters of gold.

Here's the valiant Cornish Man, 14.

CHAP.SIV: 14 565

Jack is surprised by a Giant while asleep and the danger he went through to family gain his liberty;

MIE news of Jack svictory was a goread over the western parts so that a fother Cianticalled old Blunder-bore, flearing of it vowed to be revenged on Jack, if ever it was his fortune to light on him. This giant kept an enchanted casile, situated in the midst of a louesome wood.

About four months after, as Jack was walking by the borders of a wood in his journey towards Wales, he grew weaty, and fet himfelf down by the fide of a fountain, when a deep fleep fuddenly fiezed him. At this time the giant coming here for water, found him, and by the lines upon his belt immediately knew him to be Jack, fo without any words, he took him upon his houlder to carry him to his enchanted castle As he passed through a thicket the rustling of the boughs a waked Jack, who finding himself in the clutches of the giant, was much sur prized though it was but the beginning of his terror; for entering the walls of the caffle, he found the floor covered with skulls and bones of the dead when the giant told him his bones would enlarge the number of what he faw. He then brought him into a large parlour, where lay the blood and quarters of fome lately flain; and in the next room were hearts and livers, when the giant to terrify him, faid, that men's hearts were his favourite diet, which he faid he most commonly eat with pepper and vinegar, adding, that he did not question but his heart would make him a curious breakfast. This faid, he locks up poor Jack in an upper room, leaving him there while he went ito fetch another giant, who lived in the fame wood that he might partake of the pleasure he should have in the destruction of hones Jack. While he was gone dreadful shrieks and cries affright ed Jack, especially a voice which continually cried,

Do what you can to get away.
Or you'll become the giant's prey,
He's gone to fetch his brother who,
Will likewise kill and torture you.

Long and In I dillo of it is more a oil

This dreadful news fo affrighted poor Jack; that he was ready to run distracted. Then going to the window he opened the calement, and beheld afar off the two giants coming together, So now quoth Jack to himself, my death, or deliverance is at hand. There were two strong cords in the room by him, at the end of which he made a noofe. and as the giants were unlocking the iron gates he threw the ropes over each of the giants heads and then threw the other end acrois a beam, where he pulled with all his might till he had throttled them. And then fastening the ropes to a beam, he returned to the window, when he beheld the two giants both black in the face, and so sliding down the ropes, he came to the heads of the helpless giants, who could not defend themselves, and drawing his own sword, he slew them both, and so delivered himself from their intended Then taking the bunch of keys, he en:ered the castle, whereupon strict fearch, he there found three ladies, tied up by the hair of their head, and almost starved to death, who told Jack, that their husbands had been slain by the giant, and they had been kept many days without food, in order to force them to eat the flesh of their murdered husbands, which they could not do, if they were to be starved to death. Sweet ladies, said Jack, I have just now destroyed the monster, & his brutish brother by which means I have obtained your liberties. This said he presented them the keys of the castle, and proceeded on his journey to Wales.

13

ted bimleif, ond as the giant are works ing rewards another aparta end, foch beard bim by thele words to rindelf.

CHAP. TY.

Jack travels into Flintshire, and what

ACK having got a little money, he thought it prudent to make the best of his way by travelling hard, and at length losing his way, he was be-nighted, and could not get a place of entertainment until coming to a valley between two hills, he found a large houle in a lonefome place, and by reafon of his present necessity, he took courage to knock at the gate; but to his amazement, there came forth a monstrous giant with two heads, yet he did not feem fo fiery as the other two for he was a Welch giant, and all that he did, was by private and fecret malice, under the falle thew of friendship Jack telling his condition, he bid him welcome, shewing him into a room, with a bed where he might take his night's rest. Upon this Jack undresfed himfelf, and as the giant was walking towards another apartment, Jack heard him fay these words to himself.

Tho here you lodge with me this night You shall not see the morning light, My club shall dash your brains out quite Say you so, says Tack, is that one of your Welch tricks? I hope to be as cunning as you. Then getting out of bed, he found a thick billet and laid it in the bed in his stead, and hid himfelf in a dark corner of the room.

In the dead time of the night came the giant with his club, and struck feveral blows on the bed, where lack had artfully laid the billet and then returned to his own room, fuppofing he had broken all his bones. In the morning early, Jack came to thank him for his lodging, O! faid the giant how have you refled? Did you fee any thing in the night. No, faid Jack, but a rat gave me three or four slaps with his tail. Soon after the giant went to his breakfast on a great bowl of hasty pudding, giving Jack but a like quantity, who being loth to let him know he could not eat with him, got a leather bag putting it artfully under his coat, into which he put what he should have eat.

After breakfast, he told the giant he would show him a trick; so taking a large knife, he ripped open the bag, which the giant thought to be his belly, and out came the halty pudding, which the Welch giant seeing, cries out, Corfplut! hur can do that hurself and taking up the knife he rips open his belly from top to bottom and out dropped his tripes and trully buts, so that he immediately dropt down dead,—Thus Jack outwitted the Welch giant and proceeded on his journey to Wales.

CHAP. VI.

King Arthur's Son goes to seek his fortime, meets Jack, and the wonderful thing perfomed by them whilst they were together.

ING Arthur's only fon, defired his father to furnish him with certain fum of money, that he might o and feek his fortune in the principaity of Wales, where a beautiful lady ived, whom he had heard was poll effed ffeven evil spirits. His father the ling, counciled him against it, yet he ould not be persuaded, so the favour vas granted, which was one horfe load d with money, and another to ride n. Thus he went forth without any ttendants and after many days travel, ie c nie to a large market town, in Wales, where he beheld a vast crowd of people, gathered together. King's fon asked the reason of it, was old they had arrested a corpse for many large sums of money, which the deceated owed before he died. The King's fon replied, it is a pity people should be so cruel; go bury the dead, and let his creditors come to my lodgings, and their debts shall be discharged. Accordingly they came in fuch great numbers, that before night he had almost left himself pennyless. Now Jack the Giant Killer being there, and feeing the generolity of the King's ion, defired to be his fervant. It being agreed on, next morning they fet forward when riding out of the town's end, an old woman cried out, he has owed me, twopence leven years, pray fir, pay m?, as well as the rest. He pur his hand in his pocket and gave it to her, it being the last he had lest withen turning to Jack, he faid Take no thought of care, let me alone, and I warrant you, we shall never want. Now Jack, had a finall fpell in his pocket, the which ferved them all for refreshment, they having but one penny left between them. Will the Rev. a. . Distance

They spent the forenoon in travel and discourse, until the sun grew low, when the King's son, taid Jack, since we have got no money left where can we lodge to night? Jack replied, Matter we will do well enough, for I have an uncle who lives within two miles of this place he is a huge and monstrous giant, having three, heads, and he will beat five hundred, men in armour, and make them fly before him. Alas I said the King's son, what shall we do here? He will tat us up and one mouthful; nay, we are fearce sustince in to fill up one hollow tooth, it is no matter for that, says Jacked mytelf will go before and prepare the way for you; tarry here and waterny return. He waited and Jackrôde full speed, and coming to the catle gate, he immediately began to knock with such force, that all the neighbourd ing hills resounded. The giant roated one and the control of the control of the

201

with a voice like thunder. Who is there?—None, but your poor cousin Jack?—And what news, faid he, with my cousin Jack? He replied, Dear du de compatitiv que en

Jack saves his Master's life: and forces the Spirit out of the Ludy.

TACK having overtook his mafter, they foon arrived at the lady's dwelling, who finding the King's fon to be a fuitor, prepared a banquet for him which being over, she wiped her mouth with a handkerchief, faying, mult shew me this to morrow morning or lose your head: and then put it in her bosom. The King's son went to bed right sorrowful, but Jack's cap of knowledge instructed him in it. In the middle of the night, she called upon her familiar to carry it to Lucifer,lack whipped on his coat of darknels, with his shoes of swiftnels, and was there before her, but could not be feen by reason of his coat of darkness, which rendered him perfectly invisible to Luciter himfelf. When the gave him the handkerchief, from whom Jack took it and brought it to his mafter, who producing it the next morning to the lady, laved his life,

This much furprized the lady, but he had a harder trial to undergo. The next night she salutes the King's son, telling him he must shew her next day, the lips she kissed last, or lose his head.

22

So I will replied he, if you kis none but mine. It is neither here nor there for that says she, if you do not, death is your portion. At midnight, she went again, and chid Lucifer, for letting the handkerchief go, but said she, I shall be too hard for the King's son, for I will kis thee. and he is to shew me the lips Ikissed last, and he cannot shew me thine Jack standing up with his sword of sharpness cut off the devil's head, & brought it under his invisible coat; to his master, who laid it at the end of his bolster, and in the morning when she came up, he pulled it out by the horns; shewing her the devit's lips, which he kissed list. Thus answering her twice the enchantment broke, and the evil spirit less her, when she appeared, her tormer self, both beautious and virtuous. They were married the next morning, and soon after returned with joy to the court of King Arthur, where Jack for his good tervices, was made one of the knights of the Round Table

Thus ends the First Pank, which leads to the Second, where you may have a further account of the valiant exploits and bold adventures of this noble hero; Jack the Giant Killer.

thire lack flanding mow'd his floor to of fraippeds cut of the cours had, we brought it ander his hathinie cour, to his matter, who laid it atthe end of his holker, and in the mapped when the came up, he fulled heat would the horns, came up, he fulled heat that to the horns,